Carleton grad dead

'Amazing, incredible person' Local friends mourn loss of Alberta man found dead in U.K.

JOE LOFARO
joe.lofaro@metronews.ca

An Ottawa man is mourning the loss of his former roommate Garrett Elsey, who was mysteriously found dead at a recycling facility in Bristol, England, Thursday morning.

Colin Smith, 22, said he first met Elsey in 2008 in residence at Carleton University before the pair became roommates the following year.

Elsey, a native of Sherwood Park, Alta., studied history and political science at Carleton.

He was in England only a few hours when police found his body, according to his uncle, Brent Elsey. He was there to do his master's degree in international security.

Smith found out about the terrible news through Facebook Friday afternoon. He described Elsey as an "amazing, incredible person" who would give you the shirt off his back.

On Saturday, Smith said approximately 70 of Elsey's friends gathered at The Georgetown Pub to share their memories of the 22-year-old.

"It was really humbling to see that many people come in support of him and it just shows what an impact he's had on people through his university career, through his life," said Smith.

He said a memorial service is expected to be held in Ottawa soon, but no date has yet been set.

Tragic. Naçu was killed while biking on Queen Street in 2011

JOE LOFARO
joe.lofaro@metronews.ca

A group of cyclists are planning a commemorative bike ride to mark one year since a tragic cycling accident took the life of 33-year-old Danielle Naçu.

Naçu died Oct. 11, 2011, when she fell into the path of an oncoming vehicle after having been doored while biking on Queen Street.

Cyclist Samantha McGavin helped organize an unofficial commemorative bike ride a week after the accident. The event saw more than 200 cyclists and pedestrians travel along Queen Street to a white ghost bike that was chained in Naçu's honour to a signpost.

McGavin said Naçu's brother, Brent, wanted to make the bike ride an annual event after seeing both friends and strangers come out in support.

On Oct. 11, the first annual Danielle Naçu Community Bike Ride will start at the intersection of Sparks and O'Connor streets at 11:30 a.m., and will continue along Queen Street with a brief pause at the ghost bike before ending at city hall.

McGavin said the event will pay tribute to Naçu and raise awareness of cycling safety.

"I really liked that idea in terms of an annual reminder, as a cyclist, to drivers and to the city that people need to think about us, that city planners need to design roads that take us into account," said McGavin.

"It's a great opportunity for people to come out every year and to send that message and to be together as well as to remember the wonderful person that Danielle was and her tragic passing."

Organizers will also discuss the potential for a piece of artwork that would serve as a permanent memorial for those hurt or killed in cycling collisions in Ottawa.

For more information about the event, go to on.fb.me/Oy5sYI.

Peace officers honoured as hundreds brave rain

Water dampened the caps of several hundred uniformed police officers who stood in the rain on Parliament Hill Sunday to pay tribute to their fallen comrades at the 35th annual Police and Peace Officers' National Memorial Day.

Bystanders and family members of police officers gathered around the perimeter of the Parliament Hill lawn to observe the throngs of officers from police forces from across Canada.

Margaret Mills came from Chatham, Ont., with her son and daughter-in-law, both of whom are police officers in Toronto.

"I'm very proud of them. We're all here to support them even standing in the rain," she said wearing a soaked rain jacket. "They're there for us in all kinds of weather, so I can stand for a few minutes to honour them."

Canada's Public Safety Minister Vic Toews referred to police officers as "heroes" as he opened the ceremony with his speech about sacrifice and remembrance. There are more than 800 names on the Police and Peace Officers' National Memorial Honour Roll.

"All Canadians mourn the death of police and peace officers, but none feel the loss more personally, more profoundly and more painfully than their families and their colleagues," said Toews. "Our thoughts and prayers are with you, especially today."

The minister also laid a wreath on the front steps.

Speaking at the end of the ceremony, Ottawa Police Chief Charles Bordeleau called the show of community support at the memorial "outstanding."

"It's very heartwarming when you're marching and people are applauding," he said.

Bordeleau mentioned there are 14 members of the Ottawa Police Service who lost their lives in the line of duty in the force's history — the most recent one being Ottawa police Const. Eric Czapnik, who was fatally stabbed Dec. 29, 2009.

"It's good to recognize the fact that our police officers day in, day out put their lives on the line and they do that for the safety of our community." JOE LOFARO/METRO

The activists, who crossed a barrier set up on the hill by the RCMP, intend to file an application moving for the charges to be dismissed on the grounds of delay. Graham Saul, one of the people charged, says he

The killing of an American serviceman in an exchange of fire with allied Afghan soldiers pushed U.S. military deaths in the war to 2,000, a cold reminder of the perils that remain after an 11-year conflict that now garners little public

The toll has climbed steadily in recent months with a spate of attacks by Afghan army and police — supposed allies — against American and NATO troops.

That has raised troubling questions about whether countries in the U.S.-led coalition in Afghanistan will achieve their aim of helping the government in Kabul and its forces stand on their own after

Comparisons between Trudeau, dad are tenuous

Justin Trudeau may seem to be following in dad's footsteps as he prepares to seek the Liberal leadership, but he's really heading down a vastly different path into unknown territory.

The country, its politics and the Liberal party itself have changed drastically since Pierre Trudeau mesmerized Canadians with the heady magic of Trudeauism in the spring of 1968.

That world is hardly recognizable today. The Canada of two generations ago was a country still revelling in the afterglow of the Centennial and Expo 67, wrestling with the tensions of the generation gap and ready to be led into a future of what seemed to be infinite possibilities.

People were pushing for a new kind of politics. They looked to replace the buttoned-down backroom boys and their traditional mix of pressure and patronage with more grassroots involvement. It was a "power to the people" age. TV news was beginning to flex its muscles in politics, and Trudeau seemed perfect for the cameras.

are constantly changing. People want to make comparisons to the past, but things totally change. It was just a totally different time."

Khadr's Edmonton prof predicts bright future for former student

Omar Khadr.

Convicted war criminal and child soldier returned to Canada Saturday

RYAN TUMILTY
Metro in Edmonton

An Edmonton university professor who taught Omar Khadr in Guantanamo Bay believes he will excel once he returns to civilian life.

Khadr's return to Canada on Saturday came as a great relief to his Edmonton tutor, Dr. Arlette Zinck, a professor at King's College.

"We were waiting, hoping that the Canadian government would follow through on its promise to bring him home."

Zinck made two trips to the prison as part of a team working with Khadr to give him an education. In 2010, Khadr pleaded guilty to throwing a grenade that killed an American soldier in Afghanistan in 2002.

Zinck said that Khadr is a strong student and that she expects he will make a smooth transition to civilian life when the parole board decides he is ready.

"There is nothing the young man wants more than to prove to Canadians that he is fully committed to making a positive contribution."

Zinck said she doesn't know whether Khadr has specific plans for after his release but that she expects education will be a high priority.

"When he has been released and when he is in a position to consider what his next move will be, I expect that education will be part of it."

Zinck said that the lesson given to Khadr focused on getting him ready for university. She said King's has committed to treating him like any other applicant and she would gladly recommend him.

Khadr is "desperate" to be a normal, contributing member of society, said one of his lawyers Brydie Bethell, noting that he has been studying various subjects with the long-distance help of a tutor in Edmonton.

"He's so committed to his education," Bethell said.

Khadr 'just sparkling' after return to Canada

Hours after a disbelieving Omar Khadr arrived in Canada following his 10 years in the notorious U.S. prison in Guantanamo Bay, among his first questions was whether he could get a pen and paper so he could carry on with his studies, one of his lawyers said Sunday.

Khadr, who spent the weekend trying to come to terms with his new digs — a maximum-security facility in eastern Ontario — was also keen to see his family, especially his mother, but might have to wait a while longer, said Brydie Bethell, who visited her client on Saturday and Sunday.

Bethell said Khadr, 26, was "just sparkling" but could barely believe he was finally out of American hands and back in Canada.

"He's been dreaming about this moment for 10 years, so it's profoundly momentous for him," Bethell said in an interview.

"He's been the victim of incredible manipulation, and many promises to him have been broken, so that disbelief is also born of that experience of abuse and betrayal."

Amid intense secrecy, the Toronto-born Khadr was flown to Canada early Saturday, leaving behind the prison condemned by human-rights activists around the world as a legal black hole where he was the lone westerner and youngest inmate. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Refugee health care in 'crisis': Doctor

Interim Federal Health Program. Critics claim care compromised after changes to program providing coverage for refugee claimants

The call came 35 weeks into her pregnancy, right around the time her abdominal cramps began.

It was her gynecologist's office saying changes to the Interim Federal Health Program meant her prenatal care was no longer covered. That's when Tiffany started to panic. "What am I supposed to do? I got scared," recalled the 27-year-old originally from the Caribbean.

"She told me that if I come and see the doctor I would have to pay the doctor a fee."

The Toronto resident — who wouldn't give her full name for fear it would affect her application to live here — had been going for regular prenatal checkups until then.

Some doctors say her story is an example of compromised care resulting from changes to the program providing temporary health coverage for protected persons, refugee claimants and others not eligible for provincial coverage.

Under those changes announced in the spring, some refugee claimants saw cuts to their coverage. Additionally, those whose refugee claims are rejected and those from a yet-to-be-defined list of "safe" countries will only receive care for public-health or safety reasons.

A number of health-care professionals have set up free clinics to help. It was at one such clinic that Tiffany first met Dr. Paul Caulford.

"This is an extraordinarily unprecedented crisis in Canada," said Caulford, medical director of the Volunteer Clinic for Medically Uninsured Immigrants and Refugees. He adds he finds it "appalling" the government would target the most vulnerable.

The Conservatives hope the changes will deter bogus refugee claims and ensure failed asylum seekers can't take advantage of Canada's free health care.

They also insist that care for "bona fide" refugees — including prenatal care — isn't affected. THE CANADIAN PRESS

CRA uncovered millions in unpaid GST: Documents

Gaming the system. Credit-check project targeting 439 firms reveals holes in Canadian tax code

The Canada Revenue Agency has uncovered millions of dollars worth of missing taxes by doing a simple credit check that the banks have been using for years.

The project found almost $3 million of GST revenue that had been collected from customers by new businesses but was never handed over to Ottawa, or was fraudulently refunded to them.

The money turned up after 439 firms were targeted by running their tax-registration information through a commercial credit-screening service from Equifax Canada Ltd.

Interactive Warning System is a financial-industry term for a system that identifies problems with names, addresses, social insurance numbers (or SINs), telephone numbers and dates of birth that suggest possible fraud. The system automatically flags high-risk credit applications.

institutions have for years vetted potential customers applying for mortgages, loans and credit cards through commercial credit-checking services.

But the Canada Revenue Agency had not been doing so with companies newly registering as collectors of GST/HST taxes — some of which simply kept the money.

The agency's pilot project was launched in 2010, as part of a wider effort to flush out some of the estimated $35 billion that remains untaxed in the underground economy.

The so-called Interactive Warning System project, or IWS, focused on missing GST/HST revenue, and was slated to run for two years. But the results were encouraging enough that it was ended in 2011 after just 12 months.

Internal documents outlining the project were obtained by The Canadian Press under the Access to Information Act.

"The project was considered a success," said agency spokesman Philippe Brideau. "The procedures and approaches tested provided us with risk indicators that are part of the regular procedures."

Brideau says the agency is "currently exploring follow-up use of IWS products for GST/HST compliance."

RIM's first set of phones running the BlackBerry 10 operating system will have touchscreen keyboards but not physical ones. The Qwerty version will come about "30 to 60" days later. DAVID FRIEND/THE CANADIAN PRESS FILE

Hardcore BlackBerry lovers might have to wait up to two months after the release of the BlackBerry 10 touchscreen device to get their hands on one with a physical keyboard, a strategic play by Research In Motion that analysts say reflects what customers want.

RIM chief executive Thorsten Heins, who had already indicated a touchscreen model would launch first, said Friday that the keyboard version — known in the tech community as Qwerty — will come about "30 to 60" days later.

Heins said the company

"The BlackBerry lovers, the hardcore BlackBerry lovers, they love this physical keyboard."

RIM CEO Thorsten Heins

needs to gain market share in the touchscreen segment, especially to address a trend in which employers are allowing staff to use their preferred smartphone for work.

"People ... and enterprises love a full touch device, and, you know, we had to make a choice and finally we decided really to bring both versions to market very, very close to each other," he said in an interview with MSNBC.

"The BlackBerry lovers, the hardcore BlackBerry lovers, they love this physical keyboard ... so, make no mistake, we are fully, fully committed to Qwerty."

The physical keyboard is popular often with BlackBerry business users, and the company — in its advertising — has positioned that as an advantage over Apple and Android phones that rely solely on touchscreens.

The new detail about the closely watched BB10 launch, slated for some time in the first quarter of next year, comes as RIM stock shot up 8.1 per cent following a much less disappointing than expected second-quarter earnings report.

New standards. StatsCan to revise economic history

Statistics Canada is about to retell the country's economic history for the past 30 years in a new move that will also provide more insight into murky economic concepts.

Starting Monday morning, the federal data agency will issue a comprehensive revision to economic data of the past 30 years, introducing new measures and changing the definition of others.

The exercise — two years in the making, and designed to comply with revised international standards of economic measurements set out in 2008 — will put Canada in the forefront of nations, along with Australia, in adopting the new way of measuring economic performance.

Others have pledged to follow: the United States in 2013 and Europe in 2014.

Some gross-domestic-product numbers will likely move marginally up, in part because research and development will be capitalized, and some services will be added to the export tally.

Recovery. Data shows a sluggish U.S. economy

Anyone puzzled by the most recent U.S. economic data has reason for feeling so: The numbers sketch a sometimes contradictory picture of the economy.

We've learned that consumers are more confident, but aren't spending much. Fewer people are losing jobs, but not many are being hired. Home and stock prices are up, but workers' pay is trailing inflation. Auto sales have jumped, but manufacturing is faltering.

This is what an economy stuck in a slow-growth rut can look like, and it's a focal point of the presidential campaign.

The U.S. economy grew at a scant 1.3 per cent annual rate in the April-June quarter — too weak to reduce high unemployment.

Many Americans are reducing debt instead of spending freely. Builders are borrowing less and constructing homes at a modest pace. Businesses are being cautious about hiring and expanding. In the long run, reduced debts and rising home and stock prices will help rebuild household wealth, boost consumer spending and spur job growth. But it's taking time.

BIG BUCKS RIDING ON YOUR- NAME-HERE PARK

URBAN COMPASS
Steve Collins
ottawa@metronews.ca

The Lansdowne Park redevelopment deal goes to yet another vote at city hall this week. The slog toward a final agreement with the Ottawa Sports Entertainment Group continues even as the ground continues to shift beneath the advancing bulldozers.

Little surprises have abounded as the Lansdowne saga has progressed. Last week we learned the city will have to cough up an extra $12 million over and above the more than $200 million already pledged to the partnership. And we learned the FIFA Under-20 Women's World Cup will not be taking place there in 2014 after all.

Neither of these developments will be a dealbreaker. Our famously frugal mayor is just going to whip out the civic credit card once again to borrow the $12 mil, and we're still on track to host the Women's World Cup in 2015, so the $400,000 we threw at the bid to land the two soccer events won't be a total waste.

Mayor Watson blamed the loss of the event in part on delays from legal challenges by Friends of Lansdowne, the main citizen's group opposed to the plan, and the Lansdowne Park Conservancy, which had a competing vision for the site and never got a serious hearing from the city.

It's probably safe to assume that the Lansdowne plan would have faced a certain degree of resistance from the same NIMBY-prone crowd who in previous decades bought houses near the stadium and then complained about noise and traffic during games and concerts.

But the city's decision to cancel the competitive bidding process and sole-source the deal to OSEG handed critics an unnecessarily generous stockpile of ammunition. Lesson learned, let us hope.

Perhaps the biggest surprise in the latest staff report on the Lansdowne Partnership Plan is a huge jump in the claimed value of naming rights — that is, what a corporation will pay to put its logo on the new complex for 30 years — from $15.8 million to a breathtaking $50.2 million.

Among the naming-rights risks is the civic equivalent of getting stuck with a tattoo bearing your ex-girlfriend's name long after the magic is gone (Enron Field, anyone?).

I leave the reliability of these predictions in such gloomy economic times to better minds than mine, but the discrepancy between the two estimates doesn't exactly inspire confidence in Lansdowne math generally.

For comparison's sake, in Toronto, the Air Canada Centre's corporate christening was priced at $30 million over 20 years, and Rogers Communications paid $25 million to put their name on the Rogers Arena for 10 years, so the new figure may not be entirely off base, but it seems optimistic.

Certainly out of the question is leaving the cash from naming rights, no matter what the final amount, on the table. Here in the home of JetForm Park and the Corel Centre, we understand that corporate branding, no matter how transient, heritage-obscurer or confusing to visiting tourists when the names inevitably change, has become a standard strategy for covering the costs of these venues.

Still there are risks, from ending up with an incongruous or simply goofy name on your arena (Louisville's KFC Yum! Centre comes to mind) to the civic equivalent of getting stuck with a tattoo bearing your ex-girlfriend's name long after the magic is gone (Enron Field, anyone?).

The original naming rights for Lansdowne went to Sir Henry Charles Keith Petty-Fitzmaurice, the Fifth Marquess of Lansdowne, Sixth Earl of Kerry, and Canada's governor general from 1883-1888. With such an unwieldy pile of honorifics to work with, we did well to end up with plain old Lansdowne Park.

As for the smaller corporate logos that are to dot the 360,000 square feet of retail space at Lansdowne, few names, apart from Whole Foods, the LCBO and Empire Theatres, are on offer.

The proponents claim other deals have been made, but it's curious that a few tenants can't be brought forward to admit their involvement, and maybe even express some excitement.

Names are serious business. The retail area, for example, isn't being called anything as gauche as a "mall." Instead, it's a "retail village."

Foam's up, dude!

Brave surfer taking in murky waves caught by photographer

These ferocious waves have certainly whipped up a frenzy of foam.

This surfer tested some murky-coloured waves while dodging logs and debris, after a floodwater deluge hit Karitane on the south island of New Zealand.

Photographer Chris Garden, 30, spotted the unusual sight as he drove along the coastline.

METRO

Cause

Dead algae behind foamy mass

While sometimes resulting from pollutants, sea foam is often caused by dead algal blooms that are whipped up by high gales and eventually build up along the shoreline.

The frothiness of the foam is caused by the continuous churning motion of the tide that traps cloistered bubbles of air in the decomposing organic material.

METRO

Concert aids recovery of music teacher

News Worth Sharing

Media will always have to report on the tough stuff. But we know that Canada is full of compassionate individuals, inspiring projects and stories worth celebrating. Here's just one.

This is music to our ears: For 28 years, beloved music teacher Allison Woyiwada has been making a difference in the lives of her students. Now, the Ottawa community is giving back to her.

Woyiwada retired from teaching at Hopewell Avenue Public School in 2008, but continued to pursue her passion for music through work with the Savoy Society of Ottawa.

In May, Woyiwada underwent major surgery for a brain aneurysm. As only her hospital stay was covered by insurance, her recovery was set to be lengthy and expensive. In July, her daughter, Marya, began planning a benefit concert to raise funds for restorative therapy for her mother. The benefit concert, attended by Woyiwada's friends, family, former students and colleagues, was held on Sept. 23 and featured performances by Hopewell's jazz band and a former student.

"She used music to touch people's lives, and now we're using music therapy to get hers back," says Marya.

To follow Woyiwada's progress, read her blog at

Poems written by your cat

Literature. In his best-selling book, I Could Pee on This: And Other Poems by Cats, Francesco Marciuliano decodes a kitten's mind

ROMINA
MCGUINNNESS
scene@metronews.ca

What made you want to decipher cat's thoughts?
Humans tend to project their thoughts and feelings onto their pets but the exchange is pretty much one-sided. Cats live in their heads so it seemed natural to figure out what was going on. When they're not napping 18 hours straight, cats have all this time of reflection — and I've always wondered, what are they thinking of all this time?

But why not fish or dogs?
I grew up with cats, a dog,

Call this guy William Shakespaw / THINKSTOCK

a canary, a turtle. I sound like Dr Dolittle. But from the moment I was born, I was basically greeted by a cat which makes it sound like the cat actually got into the hospital. And then after college, my girlfriend and I got two cats: Boris and Natasha. In every one of my relationships the cats were always the constant, I always got to keep them. And in every subsequent relationship, I brought in the cats.

What makes a cat's thoughts more intriguing than say, a dog's?

Dogs have a very rich exterior life and cats have a very rich interior life. Dogs are always trying to tell you something like 'I love you' or, 'oh god I need to pee right now.'

But cats are very reflective and need their own space. They're like, 'we're good if I'm over here and you're over there. We don't need to do this 24/7.'

You spend a lot of time going, 'what are they not telling me?' Which sounds insane, because then it sounds like you turn to the toaster you're like, 'what is the toaster not telling me?'

What valuable life lessons can humans learn from their pet cats?

People who don't like cats see them as arrogant creatures, when in reality it's more about confidence. They're thinking: 'I'm not dismissing you but I don't need your constant attention. I can be by myself. When we're together and you want a hug, perfect. When you're not hugging me, I'm not desperately thinking oh god — do you not like me anymore?'

The lesson here is that you need to be ok with yourself. When you're with people, fantastic, but there's nothing wrong with being by yourself.

Sounds like cats would be good at giving us relationship advice.

Yes. That's part of the nature of a cat, they're very reflective, poised and comfortable with whom they are. They're like, 'I don't always have to sit on your lap. That doesn't mean we're apart, or that there's a problem.'

Basically, quiet moments in a relationship don't mean everything has gone to hell.

Do you think cats would make good humans?

Yes I do. Unlike what people think, I don't think they would be emotionally distant.

Kutcher's new romance has been brewing for some time

Ashton Kutcher's new romance with Mila Kunis has apparently been a long time coming, according to Us Weekly.

"He's always had a thing for her," a source says. "It's a real infatuation."

The pair have reportedly been together for five months but have kept things quiet until recently, as they've been spotted all over New York City offering up plenty of public displays of affection.

Kutcher is reportedly living with Kunis while she is in New York for film The Angriest Man.

Scuffles broke out at the BET Hip-Hop Awards on Saturday in Atlanta.

Rick Ross and Young Jeezy were reportedly involved in an altercation backstage at the annual awards ceremony.

Funk Master Flex posted to Twitter that he witnessed "pushing and shoving" between the two.

Then the rappers and their entourages took the fight outside and shots were reportedly fired in the parking lot by a member of Rick Ross' entourage.

The gunman was apprehended by the Atlanta Police Department.

AllHipHop.com sources also reported that 50 Cent and rapper Gunplay were involved in an altercation as well.

Robert Pattinson and Kristen Stewart.

Friends skeptical about Twilight star's reconciliation

While Kristen Stewart and Robert Pattinson seem happy to be back together after her cheating scandal over the summer, their friends reportedly aren't so thrilled about the rekindled romance, according to Hollyscoop.

"Kristen and Rob's friends absolutely don't believe that this reconciliation is going to last. Rob believes that Kristen didn't sleep with (director) Rupert Sanders,) but the fact is she still cheated on him," a source says. "Rob's pals think it was easier for him to get back together with her right now because of the upcoming publicity blitz they are going to embark on to promote Breaking Dawn."

As for the long-term prospects of the reunited couple? They aren't so optimistic.

"Kristen loves Rob, no question about it, but she just isn't as mature as he is," the source says. "Rob's buddies would be stunned if the couple goes the distance."

Are you just keeping them safe or helicopter parenting?

Polar opposites.

Opinions are split whether you're being responsible or overbearing if you follow your child's bus

ALEXANDRIA DURRELL

yummyclub.ca

My daughter started Grade 1 at a new school this year. That means there are a few changes around here.

And by "a few," I mean pretty much everything we were used to has changed.

She's starting French Immersion. (Her French consists of mumbling a line she heard in Barbie and The Three Musketeers.)

Her old school was a two-minute walk from our front door and required no street-crossing. Now she takes a bus with a bunch of kids she doesn't know, most of whom are much older than she is.

And perhaps the biggest adjustment of all: She has to be on that big, old bus a full hour before she used to even wake up.

On her second day, she grumped to her Daddy, "I never get to sleep in!"

Following your child's school bus could affect her confidence. ISTOCK

Oh, kid, you have no idea.

All of this has been thrown onto a kid who is adverse to change. So I get what it's like to have a kid go through all this momentous change, I really do.

And I don't like change either. I'm nervous about how my little girl will fit into her new class. I fear the adjustment to the new language. I have irrational visions of bus accidents and bullying and a million other things.

But here's the thing: I figure that it does me no good to project my fears onto my daughter, so when she confidently gets on that school bus, I smile and wave and rah-rah her independence.

Then I shuffle home and cry a few tears on my own. I don't hop in the car and follow her to school, hide behind bushes or question the abilities of the driver and staff who are meant to get her where she's supposed to be, safely.

Another parent at my daughter's bus stop waved her child onto the bus, hopped in her car and followed them to the school.

I asked her why and she said something along the lines of just "wanting to make sure everything is OK."

Now, parents have been asked not to do this because it clogs up the traffic around the small residential neighbourhood the school is in.

The parents can't actually drive up anywhere near the school — they have to park a few streets away.

So after being told all this, it never crossed my mind that following the bus was "a thing".

I'm supposed to follow the bus to ensure it arrives? Or watch my daughter get off the bus and be immediately ushered to the back play yard by a teacher? Why? What information am I supposed to garner here?

I asked on Twitter whether I was "supposed" to follow the bus. The answers were on polar ends of the spectrum.

I heard the parents saying that, yes, they follow the bus to school. "To watch (my)kid get off the bus" or "My child is nervous, this is a big change! Of course I follow the bus!" and I heard the others, like @MissJoyFG, say, "Whup, whup, whup! Hear that? It's the sound of a helicopter parent descending. Yikes."

Many expressed concern over parents following the bus, indicating that it could affect the child's confidence or independence.

Others felt it was just the way things should be done.

I was left somewhere in the middle, wondering if I was being irresponsible by not following along to "make sure" that bus driver knows what he's doing.

On the other hand, I was feeling pretty proud about not hovering over my daughter.

The In-Credibility Factor

Dave Hale PROVIDED

Name: Dave Hale
City: Ottawa
Age: 24

THE IN-CREDIBILITY FACTOR
Teresa Kruze
life@metronews.ca

Deciding he was more passionate about marketing and sales than becoming a criminal lawyer, Hale founded Soshal Group, a digital marketing agency. In just two years Soshal Group has grown to 12 employees and is aiming for 20 by the end of the year.

I knew I was on my way when... I signed my first six figure client and I realized I wouldn't have to go to my parents anymore and ask for money. Right now we're working with some pretty notable clients like the United Way, Ottawa Senators, the Canadian Hockey League and Algonquin College. Our first year compared to the second was monumental and our year over year growth is 500 per cent. Right now we're really focused on how we can take the people who have already invested in us and help them move higher.

Action Plan

- Be humble. I was egotistical and cocky when I got started at age 19. I realized early that business isn't about getting publicity. You have to run a business with a real purpose.
- Be open. We met some of our largest clients in the most obscure ways — like at speaking events. We pitched one person and they introduced us to one of their friends. Any opportunity is worth exploring when you're a start up entrepreneur.
- Be brave. If you can't wake up tomorrow and make ten dollars more than you made the day before then you're not cut out for this business. If you can do that in a small scale then you should be able to do it in a big way down the line.

Climbing up the ladder to a longer and healthier life?

Take a breather, you're the boss. A sense of control and power may lead higher ups to feel less high-strung Rising through the ranks at work may offer more benefits than a bump in pay or bigger office: new research suggests leaders with more responsibility have lower stress hormone levels than peers with less on their plates.

Lead author Jennifer Lerner, professor of public policy and management at Harvard Kennedy School, said she has been interested in how leaders make decisions and cope with stress.

Harvard researchers partnered with professors from the University of California San Diego and Stanford University, with study results appearing in this week's Early Edition of the Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences.

Participants were recruited from the Boston area and one of the many executive education programs at Harvard University. Leaders included military officers, government officials, non-profit administrators, and business leaders from the U.S. and around the world.

Study 1 looks at whether those categorized as leaders — those responsible for managing others — and non-leaders had any differences in their reports of anxiety and levels of the stress hormone cortisol.

About 200 leaders and non-leaders provided saliva samples to determine baseline cortisol levels. Anxiety was measured using the 19-item Spielberger Trait Anxiety Inventory, where participants read statements and selected a response to indicate how they generally feel. "I get in a state of tension or turmoil as I think over my recent

You've got a million things on your mind, but would you be less inclined to worry about them if you were a leader? ISTOCK concerns and interests" was one example of a statement in the inventory.

In their introduction, researchers wrote that they suspected leaders have lower stress levels because of the "psychological resources that leadership affords." They wrote of how holding a leadership role boosts one's sense of control, known to have "a stress-buffering effect."

Researchers also cited the work of Stanford neuroscientist Robert Sapolsky which associated higher social rank with lower cortisol in non-human primate species.

Studies of humans have also linked higher employment rank to better health, they wrote.

Study 1 found that those who identified as leaders had lower cortisol levels and reports of anxiety than non-leaders.

"It wasn't surprising to us, no," Lerner said in an interview from Cambridge, Mass. "But the conventional wisdom is the higher you ascend in leadership responsibility, the more stressed you are."

Study 2 measured anxiety and cortisol among 75 leaders, as well as aspects of leadership that indicate greater rank or power.

High-ranking leaders might be responsible for personally managing a large number of people, might have many subordinates — including those who don't report directly to them — or might be given great authority and autonomy to make decisions regarding subordinates, researchers wrote. To capture different forms of leadership, researchers assessed leadership level by authority, the number of subordinates and the number

A president's P.O.V.

In a recent Vanity Fair profile, U.S. President Barack Obama offered some insight into his decision-making process

- "You'll see I wear only gray or blue suits," Obama told the magazine. "I'm trying to pare down decisions. I don't want to make decisions about what I'm eating or wearing. Because I have too many other decisions to make."
- Plotnick said the example illustrates the ability of leaders to focus energy on where they're going to make a difference.

of people who directly reported to them.

Researchers found participants in Study 2 who held more powerful positions displayed lower cortisol levels and less anxiety than those who had less powerful positions.

Interestingly, those leaders with fewer subordinates were found to have greater anxiety and higher cortisol levels. Lerner said there are likely multiple reasons why those particular leaders were found to be more stressed. But one of the key findings researchers identify relates back to the sense of control.

"When you have a sense of control, then it reduces stress hormone secretion," she said.

Lerner said one of the most promising aspects of their research is an understanding not only that there's lower stress among higher-ranking leaders, but also the reasons why, allowing them to design interventions that improve people's sense of control.

Is your office a bit too close to home?

Temptation to slack off. Make sure your home office space is set up to maximize professional potential

Working from home has its advantages and disadvantages. The short commute, the relaxed dress code and flexible work hours are all appealing benefits. But one of the greatest challenges of working from home is making it seem that you are not. Here are some tips to help turn your home space into a work space:

Your site

Websites are often the first introductory point of a new business, so make sure you have a clean, professional site with your own domain name and workplace email address. Avoid using "free" sites that are bombarded with other company's advertisements; this can be very off putting to potential new clients. If you are

Yes you can roll out of bed to your desk, but is this truly the best idea for your business? ISTOCK not a skilled graphic designer, consider using a clean website-design template with basic, but necessary information.

Your phone line

It can be difficult to conduct a client call when the kids are picking up the handset to make their own calls and a telemarketer is calling on the other line. To avoid these distractions, consider a dedicated business phone line with a distinctive tone separate from your home phone. Take advantage of your existing high-speed Internet connection and use a voice over

IP phone system. A sleek VoIP device like the Ooma Telo will save you money on the cost of a second line.

Your space

Whenever possible, have a separate room for your home office with its own door. This is especially important if you plan to host regular client meetings.

Make sure the room is located far from busy areas of the house, like the kitchen and family room, to avoid excessive noise and distractions.

CONSIDER A CAREER AS A PARALEGAL

Did you know that to practice as a Paralegal in Ontario you must be licensed by the Law Society of Upper Canada (LSUC)? In order to write the LSUC licensing exam, you must graduate from a program of study accredited by LSUC.

The paralegal program at Algonquin Careers Academy is accredited by LSUC. The objective of this program is to provide both theoretical and "hands-on" training in the key areas of paralegal work and to ensure the student is prepared to successfully undertake the Law Society's licensing exam.

The need for well-trained, competent legal professionals has never been greater. Paralegals may find employment in a wide variety of workplaces, including:

- Government (Federal, Provincial, Municipal)
- Advocacy agencies
- As a Self-Employed Paralegal
- Law and Paralegal Firms
- Courts (Federal and Provincial)
- Legal Clinics
- Banks/Financial Institutions
- Insurance Companies
- Large Corporations

'Co-survivors' play a lead role in recovery

Lean on me. The story of how a woman's 'tribe' have been there to support her

KATHY ULLYOTT
Special to Metro Canada

For every woman diagnosed with breast cancer (and that will be 22,700 Canadian women this year alone, according to the Canadian Cancer Society), dozens more individuals are devastated along with her.

But that network of "co-survivors" — parents, partners, children, siblings, friends, co-workers — also plays a lead role in her recovery. From helping her make treatment decisions to holding her hand through chemotherapy to babysitting her kids for an hour, a cancer patient's "tribe" helps her get through it and get well.

Meet 38-year-old Kate Kerr, a marketing executive and mother of two small boys. After growing up in the

UK, where her family moved when she was a small child, Kate moved back to Canada 10 years ago and in 2006, married her partner Don.

Eleven months ago, she was diagnosed with a highly aggressive form of breast cancer. In the long almost-year since then, she has had a mastectomy, chemotherapy, a second surgery to remove 13 lymph nodes and radiation.

"It's only now sinking in what my friends, work colleagues, have done for me," says Kate. "If there were a book about the top 10 things to do for someone going through cancer, my family wrote that book."

On the next pages, we introduce you to Kate's "tribe" and how they have been there to support her, along with 10 pieces of advice on how you can help a friend with cancer.

Control your stress

Being mindful of health

When it comes to cancer, stress can be a cause and effect; reducing it is a big part of both the prevention and the treatment of illness.

Mindfulness meditation, the practice of clearing the mind through deep breathing exercises, is becoming an increasingly widespread part of healing and coping with cancer.

Dr. Miroslava Lhotsky, one of the facilitators of Mindfulness Meditation Toronto, is a physician who spent years delivering bad news to women whose mammograms had revealed breast cancer. "You can imagine the kind of adrenaline that flows in their body and the fear they have," she says. Now, she helps patients focus on the present moment and control their stress and anxiety through meditation. "It's a skill that you have to develop."

Lhotsky started leading mindfulness meditation sessions nearly a decade ago and has seen the practice grow in popularity. "(It) is one of those things that can change your brain in a very positive way," she says of the exercise. "It can control the pain, it can control the stress, it can improve your immune system."

It's also scientifically proven to work: studies show that with deep breathing, the movement of the diaphragm stimulates the parasympathetic system, which helps the body relax.

This relaxation is a key to good health, says Lhotsky. "Your lifestyle is so very important. This is just another way of getting into a good lifestyle."

Exemplary women

Hope, optimism and courage

Look Good Feel Better celebrated hope, optimism and courage in the face of cancer last week by honouring 20 exemplary women from across the country. LGFB says each of the honourees, in her own unique way, represents the Look Good Feel Better spirit and has helped the group achieve its mission of ensuring that no woman has to face cancer alone.

The honourees include:

Dr. Alexandra Ginty, MD, FacingCancer.ca blogger
Beverly Thomson, co-host Canada AM
Bif Naked, Canadian singer and songwriter
Catherine Brunelle, FacingCancer.ca blogger
Cynthia Mulligan, reporter and anchor, CityNews Toronto
Emily Duff, LGFB teen testimonial
Heather Bunting, LGFB workshop team leader
Dr. Jennifer Blake, MD, MSc, FRCSC Sunnybrook Health Sciences Centre
Joan Michetti, 20 Year LGFB volunteer educator and team leader
Johanne Robitaille Manouvrier, FacingCancer.ca blogger and author
Katie Evans, FacingCancer.ca blogger
Leslee Thompson, President & CEO, Kingston General Hospital
Libby Znaimer, VP News and TV host, Zoomer Media
Linda Kilburn, LGFB cover model and testimonial
Linda Lewis, editor-in-chief of MORE Magazine

Alexandra Pittortou, Kate's best friend

Alex has been Kate's best friend since they were six years old, growing up together in the UK.

When Kate was diagnosed, Alex dropped everything and flew to Toronto, arriving just before her mastectomy last November. When she returned home, she shaved her hair off – even before Kate had lost hers to chemo. “As children, we always had the same dolls, clothes and haircuts,” explains Alex, “So I thought, why should now be any different?”

Because she was too far away to offer practical help, “I decided the best thing to do was to let her know I was available for her to speak 24/7, and email daily just to be a sounding board if she needed it. Actually, my emails turned into being daily drivels of my life!”

Don Kerr, Kate's partner

As Kate's partner, Don was shocked when a doctor told him, early on, that divorce rates soar for couples dealing with breast cancer. “A few months in, I understood.” Cancer can expose all a relationship's vulnerabilities, he says; as the partner of someone with cancer, “Part of your reality is to be the outlet for all the fear, anger and frustration. You can feel like you're going 15 rounds with (boxer) George Chuvalo.”

A writer and branding specialist with his own marketing company, Grace Hanna Brandworks, Don began a blog, “Riding Shotgun,” on a cancer support web site, facingcancer.ca. “How do you give support and keep sane?” he wrote on Aug. 17. “From the shotgun seat you don't really have an option. At least on the supporting issue.” The best advice he got came from a fellow blogger on the site. “She said, a man's first instinct is to say, ‘I can fix this.’ But you can't; you can't fix this. So you're left to do . . . what? . . . The answer is to just be there. You can listen and hear, and let her know that you will be there for anything.”

Wendy Sanders, Kate's mother

As it happened, Wendy's parents had moved from England and next door to Kate and Don in Oakville the year before her diagnosis. As well as staying by Kate's side in “my darkest hours,” and nursing her through long nights of vomiting (anti-nausea drugs didn't work for Kate), Wendy took care of the Kerrs' home and meals and looked after their sons, Gabriel, 4 and Samuel, 2, while Don worked.

Wendy's parents' practical help extended to helping Kate research the type of cancer she had, possible treatments and medical experts. Spiritually and emotionally, says Wendy, “I needed to give her constant reassurance, hope and belief that we would work through this challenge together, that she wasn't alone.”

10 things you can do or say to help a friend with a cancer

Tip No. 1

Just be there

Phone or email regularly. Alex, who emails Kate daily, says, “Life went on for me, all the normal day to day trivia, but Katie's life changed direction completely. The least I could do was put aside some of my day for her, every day.”

Tip No. 2

Stay connected for the whole journey

You tend to get support through surgeries and chemo, says Kate, but knowing people are thinking about you through the end of the race “gives you the strength to continue.”

Tip No. 3

Think practically

Making meals, babysitting and running errands may sound trite, but relieving your friend of mundane but unavoidable responsibilities can be an incredible boost and allow her to focus on the task of recovery.

Tip No. 4

Get support yourself from other 'co-survivors'

At facingcancer.ca, cancer patients and their caregiving circles share experiences, advice, insight and strength.

John Nishida, Kate's boss

"Kate isn't just a great and dedicated wife and mother, but she's also a stellar employee and a stellar professional," says John Nishida, Kate's boss and president of Pigeon Branding & Design, where Kate is vice-president of client services and strategy. Because he understood how important her career is to her, "I wanted her to continue to feel connected to the business, without worrying or having her stress about work at all."

John asked Kate if she would like him to email her a weekly update on the business; she loved the idea. "It was really to help her stay connected and let her know she didn't have anything to worry about. ... I think the role of any employer should be to give the person some peace of mind over things that can be a distraction."

Kate Kerr

"I was just a regular kind of person before – I pretty much lived my life on autopilot, which I now realize is not the way to live," says Kate. With her diagnosis in late October, 2011, "My life, my world, changed. For. Ever."

Booked for an immediate mastectomy, Kate came across a book in Toronto's Mount Sinai Hospital bookstore: Anticancer: A New Way of Life by David Servan-Schreiber (Viking, 2009). In it, Dr. Servan-Schreiber recommended three essential weapons against cancer: fitness, good nutrition and stress reduction. Kate seized all three, promptly buying a treadmill, adopting an anti-cancer diet and learning to meditate. Today she runs 30 minutes a day and is participating in a three-year program of mindful meditation.

"I discovered and am learning how to really live a full life, to make every moment count, to try to be a bigger, better person," she says. "Having gone through this breast cancer journey, my eyes are now opened, my ears are listening, and I am seeing life so, so differently. But it started with the support we were given right from the beginning: Overwhelming support and love of so many people that I could never have predicted."

Andy Sanders, Kate's brother

Kate describes her older brother Andy as her "financial protector." A certified financial planner, Andy guided his sister through the financial challenges of cancer treatment and taking time off work. Much more than that, though, he was a steadying rudder. "When I called Andy to break the news to him, his first words were, 'Katie, we're going to get through this.' That was huge for me because up till that point I was pretty sure that it was game over. Those were exactly the right words at the right time."

"My goal was to make sure Kate felt completely looked after, to give her some direction, focus, reassurance and hope that there are better days ahead," says Andy, whose approach is one of humour and compassion. "Just because somebody has cancer doesn't mean they've lost their sense of humour."

Resources for caregivers

The National Cancer Institute estimates that one in two men and one in three women will get cancer in their lifetimes. Along with these statistics is the reality that many of them will need a caregiver and advocate. Deborah Cornwall, a cancer survivor, wrote a book with those caregivers in mind. Things I Wish I'd Known: Cancer Caregivers Speak Out, provides caregivers with resources that cover everything from advocating for a cancer patient to how to take time out for yourself.

Tip No. 5

Admit you can't possibly understand what she's going through

But ask your friend to help you understand better, and to be blunt about what she needs.

Tip No. 6

Focus on the present

"It can be upsetting to try to look too far ahead into the unknown," says Andy Sanders. "But looking to the past invites comparisons that can be overwhelming. Celebrate all the victories you can in the present."

Tip No. 7

Let your friend talk, if she wants to

But as importantly, not talk if she doesn't want to.

Tip No. 8

Don't judge her treatment choices

Or offer opinions (unless asked).

Tip No. 9

Grow a thick skin

Particularly if your relationship is very close — that of a parent or partner — you may be the only person on whom your loved one can vent her terror or fury.

"You need broad shoulders, and you need to just suck it up," says Don.

Tip No. 10

Forgive yourself your mistakes.

Now that we know the genetic codes for breast cancer, what does it mean?

Research breakthrough. Armed with more knowledge about these cancers, scientists can better target treatments

MICHELLE CASTILLO
Metro World News

It was news that hit the front pages worldwide: A new study published in September 2012 in Nature has mapped out the genetic code of the various types of breast cancer and may give us insight in how to treat the disease more effectively.

But how to interpret all the medical mumbo jumbo?

What does it mean for you? Here's what we know:

What the scientists did

In order to learn more about the different types of breast cancer, the scientists took a closer look at their genetic code, including the RNA levels, the specific gene sequencing, how the genes added certain methyl groups and which proteins they created among other things.

They compared the genomes of the breast cancer to the genomes in the rest of their body.

"The question has always been, 'What's the underlying mutiology? What are the driving mutations that create the different breast cancer subtypes?'" Ellis explained.

The researchers found about 40 differences between the different types of cancer.

One interesting finding was triple negative/basal-

Now that researchers have mapped the genetic codes of the different types of breast cancer, they'll be able to target therapies more effectively. ISTOCK like cancers actually acted more like certain aggressive forms of ovarian cancer.

What the study showed us

Ellis said that while doctors knew that there were different subtypes of cancer, they didn't exactly know how to treat each specific type. Everyone who had breast cancer would get similar blanket treatments.

Now, after these results, Ellis said researchers can focus their efforts on three therapeutic categories:

- Are there any tweaks to standard chemotherapy regimens that need to be made?
- Are there any targeted drugs that can be repurposed to effectively treat this type of breast cancer?
- What are the priorities for new drug development?

"By finding out the driving etiology (or origin) underlying these subtypes of breast cancer we can now create new therapeutic hypotheses from this data," he explained.

What it means for the future

When it comes to triple negative/basal-like cancers, Ellis explained scientists can now see if drugs that treat ovarian cancer may be more effective than current protocols. But, there are some ethical dilemmas on whether doctors should switch to new treatments.

"Should we use ovarian-style chemotherapy rather than the three drug treatment that has developed over 40 years of randomized trials?" he pointed out.

Another example is researchers found that all women with luminal A type cancers have a mutation in phosphoinositide 3-kinase, a cell receptor.

There are already drugs

What puts us at risk?

Dr. Matt Ellis, a professor with the Department of Medicine at Washington University in St. Louis who was involved with the Nature study, told Metro World News there are several factors that increase a person's risk to getting breast cancer. "Breast cancer is a disease of industrialization," he explained. "It's the consequences of women having fewer children and having children at later ages." Ellis said that we've found from literature from centuries ago that showed that Italian nuns — who were better fed than the rest of the Italian women population, sedentary and did not bear children — were more likely to have breast cancer. These Italian nuns are similar to the lifestyles that some modern women lead today. Obesity is also a factor that increases breast cancer risk, as well as the earlier onset of the menstrual cycle. Girls who start to menstruate at 9 instead of at age 14 or 15 like their mothers and grandmothers are at greater risk. The more cycles a woman has and the fewer children she has can increase her chance of getting breast cancer. Past family history of breast cancer is also another factor. Finally, women who use post-hormonal treatments to extend their menstrual cycles beyond their natural time also puts them at danger.

targeted to treat this type of mutation, so researchers can see whether current medication may also be able to help these cancer patients.

What we knew before

We've known since the late 1990s that breast cancer is four distinct types of cancer.

- Luminal A. A slow growing cancer that is positive to progesterone and estrogen receptors — meaning it is spurred on by these hormones — and negative for the human epidermal growth factor receptor 2 (HER2) protein, which is known to encourage the growth of cancer cells. It's known to have a low risk of recurrence.
- Luminal B. A fast growing cancer positive to both progesterone and estrogen receptors and HER2 negative. It's also known to have a low risk of recurrence.
- HER2 type. These breast cancers contain many types of gene mutations due to the HER2 protein and is a higher risk breast cancer than Luminal A and Luminal B.
- Triple negative/basal-like: A fast growing cancer that is negative to both estrogen and progesterone receptors and HER2 proteins. It's a high-risk version of breast cancer.

Ask an expert

How does this happen to men?

Metro sat down with professor Philip J. Drew of the London Breast Clinic to learn more about breast cancer in men.

How common is breast cancer in men?

Breast cancer in men is relatively uncommon. Around one male breast cancer is diagnosed for every 150 female breast cancers.

How can breast cancer happen to men — who technically don't have breasts?

It is wrong to say men do not have breasts. During a man's lifetime there are three peaks of incidence of breast growth. In the newborn due to exposure to maternal hormones, at puberty when some breast growth is actually more common than not and probably due to oestrogen increasing before testosterone and lastly in the male over 50 when once again the relative drop in testosterone predisposes to breast growth.

Is breast cancer hereditary, like it is for many women?

Around three to six per cent of female breast cancers are thought to be inherited and ten to 20 per cent of male breast cancers. Men are more prone to the disease if they have a close family history of male or female breast cancer.

Male breast cancer.

A 43-year-old construction worker talks about being diagnosed with a typically female illness

ROMINA MCGUINNESS
Metro World News

Less than one per cent of all breast cancers occur in men. It's so rare most people don't even know it exists. Metro speaks to a survivor about his battle with the disease. Eleven years ago, 43-year-old Rusty Lydon, a construction worker from Boston, was diagnosed with breast cancer after noticing blood leaking from his nipple. How could he have breast cancer, when he didn't even have breasts?

We don't suppose you checked your chest up for a lump: how did you find out you had breast cancer?

Men are stubborn, we don't go to the doctors if we're sick. We take an aspirin. But my sinuses were hurting so bad I had to go. I also showed my doctor this little spot of blood that had started showing up on my shirt. He examined my chest and as he squeezed my left 'boob', blood squirted out from my nipple. He sent me for a mammogram.

Did you think your doctor was crazy?

I was like, a mammogram? That's a woman thing! The radiologist told me I had a lump. I thought it was a cyst — not cancer. One month later I was diagnosed with for Stage 1 breast cancer.

Rusty Lydon and his wife Annellen are both breast cancer survivors. MIA KORAB/METRO WORLD NEWS

How did you react to the news?

I felt drained. But the doctors told me that I would be fully cured if I had a mastectomy. I didn't hesitate. Now I have this 10-inch scar but I have a really hairy chest so you can't notice it.

If there is anything in particular that can trigger breast cancer in men?

My doctor asked me if I smoked marijuana, because they found out that it causes gynecomastia — male breast enlargement.

When women undergo a mastectomy they lose or damage a breast or even both breasts. Do you think a breast cancer is psychologically easier to deal with for a man?

For a woman, a breast is womanhood, it's a big part of their body. To me, as a man looking at a woman, breasts make a woman look good.

Were you embarrassed to find out you had an illness that is only meant to only happen in women?

Getting sick isn't something you can be ashamed of, but I was shocked. Men don't go feeling up their chests all the time. But now I self examine all the time, I just put my hand on my chest and give myself a rub.

How did your wife react to the news?

It could have been any kind of cancer, but because it was breast, it was a little strange. But she took it a lot more seriously than I did. I was like, I'm fine, cut my breast off and I'm done.

Your wife was diagnosed with breast cancer last year. Did you feel you could support

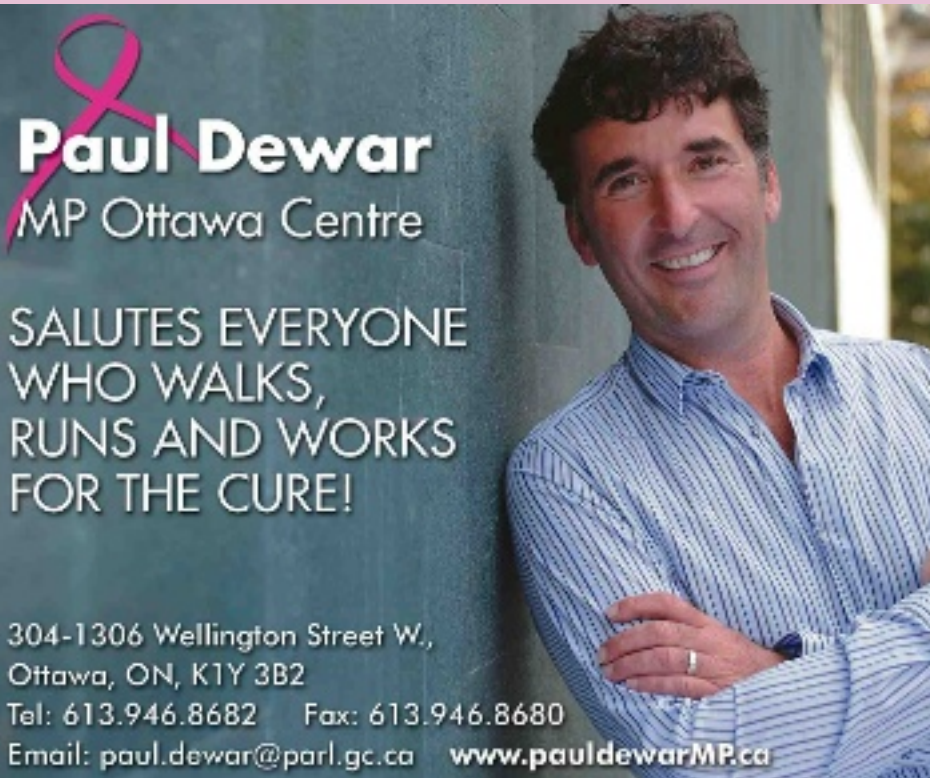

Breast cancer in men

- Rare. Breast cancer is about 100 times less common among men than among women.
- Numbers. In 2012, about 2,190 new cases of invasive breast cancer will be diagnosed among men. About 410 men will die of breast cancer.
- Outlook. Men and women with the same stage of breast cancer have a fairly similar outlook for survival.

her better because you went through the same thing?

Without a doubt. I told her not to worry about it. I think a woman goes, 'I can't be sick. I can't die. I have kids. For me it was: cut my breast off. I got to go to work. She's cancer free now but I remind her she can't think she has cancer every time she gets sick. If you think that way, you're going to mentally kill yourself.

Survivor crusades for reconstructive options after mastectomy

Fully restored.
Naneve Hawke works to help patients return to the way they were prior to having cancer

BRIGITTE NOËL
Metro World News

A decade after her first breast cancer diagnosis, Naneve Hawke was told she was cured. She would only have a month to revel in this good news: a mammogram soon revealed the cancer had returned, and that this time, her breast would have to be removed.

Hawke was rattled. "I just couldn't fathom waking up with nothing there," she says of the mastectomy. "You have this constant reminder of cancer on your chest every time you look at yourself."

After days of online research, Hawke approached her doctor with a request for a skin-sparing mastectomy and same-day reconstruction: her cancerous tissue would be removed and a new breast mound would replace it, in one fell swoop.

Hawke says many women are unaware of their options when it comes to reconstructive breast surgery. While same-day reconstruction isn't available to all, medical advances now make it possible for most breast cancer patients to consider some version of the procedure.

Surgeon Toni Zhong says reconstruction has come a long way in the last decade. "It's fantastic now," she says. "Even the implants that we're dealing with are much more natural appearing, and now we use patients' own tissue, their own body parts to restore their breast so it's basically as natural as possible."

Zhong stresses the procedure is about healing, not vanity. "I think it's vital for women to feel that when they look down on their chest, that they have gotten over that cancer stage," she says.

For Hawke, the battle with cancer has become a crusade for patient advocacy. In 2010, she founded the BRA Committee, a group devoted to raising awareness and funding for breast reconstruction surgery.

"You can come out of this knowing, not only have they treated your cancer and hopefully cured your cancer, but you've also been restored to what you were before you had your cancer," Hawke says.

Mammograms may up cancer risk in young women with gene mutation

Study. MRIs may be preferable over traditional screening tool in some women younger than 30

Mammograms aimed at finding breast cancer might actually raise the chances of developing it in young women whose genes put them at higher risk for the disease, a study by leading European cancer agencies suggests.

The added radiation from mammograms and other types of tests with chest radiation might be especially harmful to them and an MRI is probably a safer method of screening women under 30 who are at high risk because of gene mutations, the authors conclude.

The study can't prove a link between the radiation and breast cancer, but is one of the biggest ever to look at the issue. The research was published

Mammograms may put young women who carry a mutation of the BRCA1 or BRCA2 gene at increased risk of developing breast cancer. ISTOCK

Thursday in the journal BMJ.

"This will raise questions and caution flags about how we treat women with (gene) mutations," said Dr. Len Lichtenfeld, deputy chief medical officer of the American Cancer Society. He and the society had no role in the research. Mammograms are most often used in women over 40, unless they are at high risk, like carrying a mutation of the BRCA1 or BRCA2 gene. Having such a mutation increases the risk of developing cancer five-fold. About one in 400 women has the gene abnormalities, which are more common in Eastern European Jewish populations. Unlike mammograms, an MRI, or magnetic resonance imaging scan, does not involve radiation.

At risk

Test's use debated in the young

Mammograms have been proven to save lives and are clearly beneficial for women aged 50 and over who have an average risk of breast cancer. Experts are divided about their value in women younger than 50.

Some studies have suggested women with the genetic mutations that make them high risk for breast cancer could be more sensitive to radiation because the genes are involved in fixing DNA problems.

If those genes are damaged by radiation, they may not be able to repair DNA properly, raising the cancer risk.

If you can't find baked tortilla chips use regular, but the number of calories and amount of fat will be higher.

1. Preheat oven to 400 F. Lightly coat baking sheet lined with foil with cooking spray.

2. Guacamole: combine avocado, cilantro, mayonnaise, jalapeño, garlic, lemon juice, salt and pepper in bowl. Cover and set aside.

3. Working with one at a time, place chicken breast between 2 sheets of waxed paper and pound to even 1/2-inch thickness. Set aside. Whisk egg and milk and pour into shallow dish. Set aside.

Ingredients

Guacamole

- 1/2 cup mashed ripe avocado
- 2 tbsp chopped cilantro
- 1 tbsp light mayonnaise
- 1 tsp finely chopped jalapeño pepper
- 1/2 tsp finely chopped garlic
- 2 tsp lemon or lime juice
- pinch of salt and pepper

Chicken

- 1 1/2 lb skinless boneless chicken breasts
- 1 egg
- 2 tbsp low-fat milk
- 2 1/2 cups baked tortilla chips
- 1/3 cup seasoned dry bread crumbs
- 1/4 tsp chili powder
- 2 tsp vegetable oil

To Serve

- 1/3 cup medium salsa
- 1/4 cup canned black beans, drained and rinsed
- 1/2 cup shredded aged white cheddar cheese

4. In bowl of food processor, combine tortilla chips, bread crumbs and chili powder. Process until crumbly. Dip the pounded chicken breasts in the egg and milk mixture, then into the tortilla crumb mixture.

Sometimes, with the amount of things in your schedule, it's impossible to make dinner without a little bit of help. Be mindful, however, from where the help is coming.

Hamburger Helper Cheese Shells (2 cups)

926 calories/41 g fat

People traditionally make Hamburger Helper with medium ground beef and higher fat milk, increasing calorie and fat content.

Equivalent

With a normal serving size of two cups rather than the minimal size stated on the package, the Hamburger Helper Cheese Shells are equal in fat to three orders of chili nachos from Wendy's.

Tuna Helper Au Gratin (2 cups)

500 calories/13 g fat

Making this Tuna Helper with margarine, skim milk and tuna packed in water rather than oil reduces fat and calories.

Fall calls for Creamy Chicken and Potato Casseroles

Keep things simple with this Chicken and Potato Casserole by cutting down on mess and time, by mixing it right in the dish it is baked in.

The recipe also calls for the ultimate workhorse of the weeknight kitchen — the rotisserie chicken. Add a few vegetables and a creamy sauce made from pantry staples, and dinner's on the table in no time.

1. Heat the oven to 400 F.

2. In a 9-by-13-inch baking dish, stir together the mayonnaise, soup, milk, pepper, salt, thyme and garlic powder. Stir in the potatoes, zucchini, green beans, carrots and chicken. Sprinkle with the cheddar cheese and the bread crumbs.

3. Bake for 40 minutes, or until bubbling and the vegetables are tender.

Ingredients

- 1/2 cup light mayonnaise
- 10 3/4-oz can condensed cream-of-chicken soup
- 1/2 cup milk
- 1/4 tsp ground black pepper
- 1/2 tsp salt
- 1/2 tsp dried thyme
- 1/2 tsp garlic powder
- 20-oz package hash brown potatoes
- 1 medium zucchini, diced
- 1 cup green beans, cut into pieces
- 1/2 cup grated carrot
- Meat from a 2-lb rotisserie chicken, cubed, skin and bones discarded
- 3/4 cup shredded cheddar cheese
- 1/2 cup panko breadcrumbs

Discussions focus on drug policy

The NHL and the players' association met for a third straight day Sunday, and again avoided the troublesome money issues that are fuelling the ongoing lockout.

The NHL drug policy, which was a key component of talks Friday when the sides got together for the first time since the lockout was imposed Sept. 16, was the focus of talks again on Sunday.

Because of difficulty in finding common ground on how to split up money, the league and union concentrated all weekend on secondary issues that will be included in a new agreement. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MLB

AL Central title in sight for Tigers

The Detroit Tigers finally have a little breathing room in what has been an air-tight AL Central title race.

Miguel Cabrera has no such luxury as he tries to win the Triple Crown.

Prince Fielder hit a two-run homer in the eighth to lift Detroit to a 2-1 win over the Minnesota Twins on Sunday, moving the Tigers to a season-high three-game lead over the White Sox.

Joe Mauer went 3-for-4 to raise his average to .323, putting him right on the heels of Tigers slugger Miguel Cabrera (.325) for the AL batting crown.

Europeans clinch cup with heroic final day

Golf. Poulter spurs record-tying Ryder Cup comeback in Illinois

Erasing some of their worst Ryder Cup memories, the Europeans wore the image of Seve Ballesteros on their sleeves and played their hearts out Sunday at Medinah to match the greatest comeback in history and head home with that precious gold trophy.

Europe got its payback for Brookline. Martin Kaymer gave German golf redemption for Kiawah Island.

Jose Maria Olazabal squeezed his eyes and fought back tears when Kaymer holed a six-foot par putt — about the same length that countryman Bernhard Langer missed at Kiawah in 1991 — to beat Steve

Sunday surge

The Americans also rallied from a four-point deficit to win in 1999 at Brookline. This was different, though.

- The Americans won big in those early matches. At Medinah, so many of them could have gone either way.

- It was so close, so tense, that either side could have won the Ryder Cup down to the very end.

Stricker and give Europe the point it needed to keep the cup.

Tiger Woods missed a 3 1/2-foot par putt on the 18th hole and conceded a par to Francesco Molinari that halved their match, that extra half-point making it a clear-cut win for Europe, 14 1/2 to 13 1/2.

Woods and Stricker, the anchors in the lineup, didn't win a single match at Medinah.

"This one is for all of Europe," Olazabal said. "Seve will always be present with this team. He was a big factor for this event for the European side."

Ballesteros died in May 2011 from complications associated with a cancerous brain tumour, and the European squad paid tribute to the Spanish legend all week.

Ian Poulter was the first to embrace Olazabal, which was only fitting.

It was Poulter who gave

Europe hope Saturday evening when he made five straight birdies to turn a loss into a win and swing momentum in Europe's favour. Poulter was up to his tricks again on the final day, winning the last two holes in his match against U.S. Open champion Webb Simpson.

And he had plenty of help. Europe's top five players in the lineup all won, including Rory McIlroy, who came up with key birdies to hand Keegan Bradley his first loss of the week.

The biggest match might have belonged to Justin Rose. He was on the verge of losing to Phil Mickelson when Rose holed a 12-foot par putt to halve the 16th, made a 35-foot birdie putt from the back of the 17th green to win the hole, and then closed out Mickelson with a 12-foot birdie on the last hole.

Pats sink Bills with second-half outburst

New England's Brandon Lloyd makes a touchdown catch as Buffalo's Aaron Williams gives chase, Sunday, in Orchard Park, N.Y. GARY WIEPERT/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Once Tom Brady started connecting with his favourite receivers, there was nothing wrong with the New England Patriots.

Brady led six straight touchdown drives in the second half to lead New England to a 52-28 rout of the Buffalo Bills (2-2) on Sunday. The Patriots (2-2) overcame a sloppy first half and a 21-7 third-quarter deficit to avoid their first three-game skid in 10 years.

"Down 21-7 and on the road, backs against the wall, and I thought we showed a lot of heart," Brady said. "That's what this team is made of. And we're going to battle until the end, I know that."

Brady finished 22 of 36 for 340 yards and three TDs, plus one rushing.

Cornerback Devin McCourty had two interceptions, keying a defence that forced six turnovers and had three sacks.

Wes Welker had nine catches for 129 yards, and Ron Gronkowski had five for 104 yards and a TD as both players bounced back from first-half fumbles.

To most outside observers, the Boston Celtics' aging core of talent appears to be on its last legs. But don't tell Courtney Lee that. The young guard says he came to Boston from Houston in search of a championship.

Horoscopes

Aries

March 21 - April 20
Trust your instincts and don't let other people's doubts put you off doing what you know to be right. The more people say you are heading for a fall, the more likely it is you are on the right track.

Taurus

April 21 - May 21
You are who you are and that's the end of it. But it is possible to take who you are and make something of it that earns you respect. Make respecting yourself your main aim for the coming week.

Gemini

May 22 - June 21
You will find yourself in a situation where you have to defend yourself against allegations that you have been less than honest. Is it true? If so, own up to it and defuse the hostility quickly.

Cancer

June 22 - July 23
Don't give into the urge to change things around for the sake of it today because you will only have to change them back again later. You know the old saying: If it's not broken then why fix it?

Leo

July 24 - Aug. 23
You may not care what other people think about you, but the planets warn you need to see yourself from their perspective. If you don't, you may make a mistake that leaves you considerably less well off.

Virgo

Aug. 24 - Sept. 23
You have waited long enough as it is. Now, you must get started on a project that could and should transform your existence. Relationships are about to move into a more positive phase. That should help considerably.

Libra

Sept. 24 - Oct. 23
It may seem as if others are dragging their feet and making life difficult for you, and maybe they are. But you are also making life difficult for yourself. Think positive and don't let fear get a grip on you.

Scorpio

Oct. 24 - Nov. 22
Be careful what you say today because if you say the wrong thing, it could prove costly — financially and professionally. The wise course of action is to say nothing at all, at least for the time being.

Sagittarius

Nov. 23 - Dec. 21
You will come in for criticism today and although it may not be deserved, you can still learn from it. How do you do that? By learning to stay away from people who are negative.

Capricorn

Dec. 22 - Jan. 20
You must be honest in everything you do over the next 24 hours. If you cut corners or bend rules, the forces of authority will give you a hard time. You can still be Number One — somehow you always are.

Aquarius

Jan. 21 - Feb. 19
The planets warn you could be a bit too outspoken for your own good today. On the work front, in particular, you must watch the tendency to snap at colleagues when they are wrong. It won't be appreciated.

Pisces

Feb. 20 - March 20
When Venus changes signs in midweek, you will find that your attitude towards certain people is less confrontational. You can and you must protect your interests but you don't have to turn it into a war.
